Syn. Pflicht, Obliegenheit, Schuldigkeit. Pflicht indicates every kind of moral necessity, whatever its object may be. A Pflicht becomes, however, a Schuldigkeit towards the person we are bound to perform it, and this an Obliegenheit, when that which we are bound to do has been undertaken by ourselves or imposed on us by another. There are Pflichten which no one can require from us; for we have not only Pflichten towards ourselves, but also towards God (which are left to our conscience) and even towards animals. Schuldigkeit and Obliegenheit can be required from us by those to whom we are indebted. There are, however, onerous Pflichten also, and these only can be called Obliegenheiten.

Syn. Platt, Flach, Niedrig. The Platte has no perceptible elevation, the Fläche no perceptible depression. The flache hand or palm stands in opposition to the closed hand or fist, and the Oberfläche of a body is its extension in length and breadth without thickness. We call a witticism flach, when it does not go far into things, platt, when it is poor, common or vulgar. For we conceive the beautiful, the exquisite, &c., as something raised above what is common. In painting, however, platt and flach are used synonymously; they are often confounded also in common conversation. Platt and niedrig, differ, in so much as platt betrays a visible want of wit and sense, niedrig a want of nobleness of sentiments. Platte flattery is unmasqued and insipid; niedrige flattery discovers mean sentiments.

Plúmp, I. adj. blunt, coarse; heavy, awkward, unwieldy; II. adv. bluntly, coarsely, awkwardly.

Syn. I. Plump, Schwerfällig, Unbehülflich. Unbehülflich indicates awkwardness in motion, plump and ſchwerfällig its causes; the former implying the remote, the latter the proximate and immediate cause. The Plumpe has too great a mass and too rude a form. The galleons of the famous invincible fleet were plump engines and on that account extremely ſchwerfällig, so that they were too unbehülflich to escape the skilful manœuvering of the English ships.

Syn. II. Plump, Bäuriſch, Unhöflich Grob, Tölpiſch. The Tölpel displeases by his clumsey motions arising from awkwardness; the Bäuriſche displeases in his language, actions and manners from want of perception of what is becoming; but neither can be said to offend. The Plumpe and Grobe, however, fail in the respect which is due to others; the first merely from want of delicacy of feeling, the latter also from pride and contempt. The Plumpe, Grobe and Unhöflich violate the respect due to others; the Unhöflich merely omits what good breeding requires; the Grobe is really offensive both in language and actions.

Syn. Putz, Schmuck, Zierde, Zierrath, Verzierung. Putzen, Schmücken, Zieren. Putzen implies properly a lower degree of beautifying; Schmücken and zieren, a higher. Peasants putzen their rooms, when they sweep and dust them. Schmuck embellishes a thing by splendour and costliness; Zierrathen by intrinsic beauty. Putzen, in general, therefore, means to embellish; schmücken, to embellish by splendour and costliness or on solemn festivals; zieren, to embellish by the addition of something in itself beautiful, but the beauty of which consists more in the exquisiteness of the form than in splendour or costliness. Zierde, Zierrath, Verzierung, imply that with which anything is geziert or embellished; with this difference, however, that Zierde is applied also figuratively (e. g. modesty is the greatest Zierde of youth) and the other two not; whilst Zierrathen are mere trifles with which we seek to embellish anything. It is not every Zierrath in a building which is also a Verzierung.

Syn. Quacksalber, Marktschreier, Salbader. The Marktschreier is distinguished from the Quacksalber by his setting up his booth in public places and loudly proclaiming the merits of his medicines; the Quacksalber only goes into houses to recommend his medicines, or sends about printed bills in which he boasts of his cures. Quacksalber indicates, therefore, one who gives himself out for a physician from his ignorance, Marktschreier from his boasting. Salbader seems to indicate a Quacksalber in a still more contemptible light; as one who seeks to hide his ignorance, in a chattering and confused way, by technical terms from the learned languages.

Syn. Qual, Pein, Marter, Folter, Plage. Pein indicates the extent of pain as to its violence, Qual as to its duration. Pein implies, therefore, the generic idea of pain, Qual the various species of it. This is evident also from the fact that Qual has a plural, whereas Pein has not. Hence mere annoyances, which we strive to get rid of, can also quälen. The uncertainty whether what we design to do be right and good, often quält the best and most conscientious, but after a bad action the conscience of the bad man peiniget him. Children quälen an affectionate mother with their unreasonable requests. Folter and Marter are synonymous with Qual and Pein only in their figurative sense. Plage implies every kind of molestation. A nurse has much Plage with a sick child. Plage interrupts an agreeable state; Qual is an uninterruptedly painful one.

Syn. Rechtfertigung, Entschuldigung, Schutzrede, Vertheidigung, Verantwortung, Schutzschrift. When we try to prove that we have not done something bad of which we are accused, or that what we have done is not bad, we undertake our Rechtfertigung. When, however, we grant that we have done it, and that it is wrong, we can only adduce reasons to diminish our culpability, and these serve as our Entschuldigung. A Schutzrede can do both. Maternal tenderness entschuldigt a mother's indulgence for the rudeness of her children, but does not rechtfertigen it. When a Schutzrede contains merely an Entschuldigung, it is still distinguished from the latter by its presupposing an accusation, which Entschuldigung does not. A Vertheidigung may either take place with arms, where one is forcibly attacked, or it may be only verbal against reproaches or accusations. A Schutzschrift is a written Schutzrede. Verantwortung differs from Vertheidigung as relating only to an accusation of unjust actions, and secondly, that we can verantworten only our own actions, but we can vertheidigen those of another. Verantwortung is distinguished from Schutzrede in this, that by the latter we also vertheidigen another against an accusation, but by a Verantwortung only ourselves.

Syn. Reden, Sprechen, Sagen. Sprechen is merely to utter the sounds which the words in any language require; reden, to express by words its sense; sagen relates to what is uttered, whether it be the mere sounds or the subject of discourse. Parrots and some other birds may be said to sprechen; but it would be absurd to say that a parrot had geredet a long time. Sagen is more immediately related with "to tell, to explain;" as, tell me (sagen Sie mir) where he lives (not reden Sie, or sprechen Sie mir). It is, however, the same thing whether we say sagen, reden, or sprechen Sie mir nicht davon, do not speak to me about it.

A Sendschreiben is a writing, which conveys a certain idea of solemnity or importance depending on the rank or dignity of the person to whom it is sent, or on its greater size, as well as on the amplification and elaborateness of the contents. It corresponds, therefore, to our "missive, despatch or epistle."

Syn. II. Schuldlos, unſchuldig. Schuld may be considered in two points of view. It is guilt or a fault, when it conveys the impression of a neglect of moral duty, together with its imputation and harm; when it implies an injury committed or a wrong sustained. This last idea prevails in unſchuldig (harmless), the first in ſchuldlos (guiltless, faultless); children are said to be unſchuldig (innocent), because they are incapable of doing anything wicked; when certain pleasures, games, sports, &c are said to be unſchuldig (innocent, innocuous), all that is meant to be conveyed is, that they are not detrimental; those are ſchuldlos (guiltless, innocent), which are not opposed to any moral law.

Syn. Schwere, Gewicht, Wucht. Schwer, Wichtig. Schwere and Gewicht are rendered manifest not only by motion, but also by pressure on the body, that opposes the central or centripetal force. Wucht is properly speaking evident alone by force or momentum. Bodies differing from each other as to Gewicht (weight or specific gravity) fall with equal velocity in a vacuum, and therefore are of the same absolute Schwere (absolute gravity). Hence it appears that Schwere is heaviness or gravity, Gewicht weight, and Wucht ponderousness, ponderance. In a figurative sense, that which is schwer (heavy), requires much force or power, and that which is wichtig (weighty) produces great effects, is effective. It is eine schwere Frage (a difficult, grave question), what constitution or form of government may be the best, but it is wichtig (important, momentous) that the government be carried on as it ought to be.

Syn. Segnen, (Einen) einsegnen, (Etwem) den Segen geben. Segnen (to bless) is principally distinguished from den Segen geben (to give the blessing or benediction) by this, that the former represents also the mere inward wish, whilst the latter expresses that wish by words or other signs. Thus the priest, at the close of divine service, gibt den Segen (gives the blessing) to his congregation; he gives also the nuptial benediction at the altar, &c. Einsegnen is to consecrate, also to devote by a blessing or by invoking the grace of God (e. g. children at confirmation).

Syn. Sehen, Ansehen, Gaffen, Angaffen, Gucken, Schielen, Blinzen. The act of directing the eyes to any object is expressed by ansehen (to look at); the ocular perception of that object by sehen (to see). He who wants to sehen (see) any thing properly, must ansehen (look at) it, and he who ansieht any thing within the scope of his vision, supposing his sight to be perfect, will also sehen (see) it. Ansehen without attention is gaffen or angaffen, i. e. to gaze or stare stupidly, to gape at. The Gaffer (gaper, starer, gazer) has his eyes wide open without seeing distinctly, or without being exactly conscious of what he really is seeing. Angaffen differs from gaffen in implying a definite object, whilst the latter is to gape at any thing. Gucken expresses a part of the meaning of sehen, viz. that part denoting the direction of the eyes to the object, but implies besides the inquisitive approximation of the head towards the same. It is hence "to peep, peer, look inquisitively." Schielen is to squint and blinzen is to blink accompanied with winking, i. e. "to blink and wink."

Sélten, I. adj. rare, scarce; unfrequent, seldom; extraordinary; II. adv. seldom, rarely, scarcely, unfrequently.

Syn. Selten, Seltsam. Selten is an attribute of any thing that is seldom found or possessed; it implies something which always has a certain value derived from the very fact of its being uncommon, and very often it produces admiration, pride or delight: it is, therefore, equivalent to "rare, scarce;" on the other hand seltsam is an epithet, that conveys the idea of something not only uncommon, but likewise unusual, that differs from what our mind ecaceives to be true to the laws of nature, of sound reason, of universal custom, thereby exciting always surprise, very often risibility and perhaps contempt; hence it is appositely explained by strange, odd or by the familiar word queer; both words may sometimes be explained by singular or curious; if it makes us laugh or sneer, seltsam often answers to funny, droll.

Séltenheit, f. (pl. -en) rareness, rarity, scarcity; —en, rarities, curiosities.

Séltsam, I. adj. 1. strange, odd, irregular, wonderful; 2 + rare; II. adv. strangely, oddly; es sieht — aus, it affords a strange sight, it looks odd.

Syn. Seltsam, Unglaublich, Wunderlich, Wunderlam, Wunderbar. All these words, with the exception of Unglaublich, have reference to the object or subject itself; unglaublich (incredible) expresses an opinion or judgment upon the possibility or reality of the said object, &c. Wunderlich (queer) refers merely to every action proceeding from our will or fancy, to every idea, &c. that is repugnant to stern reason or sober judgment; it is, therefore, either singular, eccentric or whimsical. A capricious or fanciful man is wunderlich (singular, odd, whimsical), his actions are wunderlich (surprising, extraordinary), his ideas are wunderlich (eccentric, strange, fantastic). Wunderlam is wondrous, and wunderbar is wonderful. Seltsam is that which from being unusual or eccentric appears generally to be wrong or improper, it is, therefore, strange, odd, queer, singular, curious. Vid. also Selten.

Syn. Seufzen, Aechzen, Stöhnen. Seufzen (sighing) is produced as well by a deep and long-drawn inspiration as by a strong expiration. Stöhnen and Aechzen are the strong expulsion of the breath attended with a painful sound. Seufzen is, moreover, the more subdued expression of a mental suffering. Aechzen shows the immediate presence of a pang or throw, and Stöhnen reveals the exhausting exertion of enduring suffering. The strict censor ſeufzet (sighs) over the corruption of the times. A patient aechzt (groans, utters a groan) when racked by a pain. A man ready to sink under a burden, one mortally wounded, ſtöhnt. It seems, therefore, that aechzen is to groan acutely, and ſtöhnen to utter low, mourning or deep groans, to groan heavily or gaspingly.

Stämmeln, v. a. & n. (aux. haben) to stammer, stutter, hammer in speaking; to lisp; fig. to falter; pronounce, express in a faltering voice.

Syn. Stammeln, Stottern, Lallen. Stottern implies an interruption or break, and ben a repetition of words or syllables accompanied by a painful feeling of exertion on the part of the person so speaking. It arises either from a natural defect or from an unfortunate habit. It is, therefore, identical with our "to stutter." Stammeln and Lallen merely imply an imperfect utterance without the accompanying defects of stottern. The children lallen or stammeln, when their tongue, as yet imperfectly trained, utters words only partially or incorrectly; stammeln is, therefore, almost the same as our "to stammer." Lallen is the stronger word of the two, expressing the higher degee. Hence it is sometimes equivalent to our "to mutter;" in choice or poetica. language it may be rendered by "to lisp."

Mißfallen can be limited to the mere feeling and be kept confined in one's own mind, but when a person tadelt and mißbilligt, he lets his opinion be known either with intelligible signs or more generally with words. Eintheilen (to dispose, &c.) denotes that one separates the greater whole into smaller parts of a definite regular number, or a thing of higher rank into parts of inferior rank. This may be done by the mind merely; if this separation is also made evident to the senses by outward signs, it then becomes abtheilen (to part off, to divide, &c.). Sertheilen (to part asunder, to disconnect, dissever) is separating the constituent parts of a whole in such a manner, that they exist as independent wholes for themselves.

It is, however, far more comprehensive than the English "cattle," which merely implies oxen and horses; vid. Federvieh, Zugvieh, Maſtvieh, Schlachtvieh, Rindvieh u. ſ. w. The ant is considered an industrious Thier and the bee a prudent Thier. Hence the term "animal" is not the full equivalent for Thier; for although all living things are animals in contradistinction to vegetables, &c., the word cannot be used in common life for an insect, a bird, or a fish, &c., but these words must be substituted for the German Thier as the context may require.

Thieriſch, I. adj. animal; brutish, beastly, bestial; die —e Wärme, animal heat; II. adv. brutishly, bestially.

Syn. Thieriſch, Viehiſch, Brutal. Thierisch in man is every thing that he has in common with other animals. This is not opposed to the prerogatives of his reasoning nature, and does not exclude them. That which is opposed to them, is viehiſch. Every gratification of sensuality has something thierisch (of the animal) in it, but that indulgence which by its violation of nature's laws or by its extreme excess degrades man from the rank obtained by his reason, that is viehiſch (brutal, bestial). Brutal is an epithet of the coarsest sensuality.

Tilgen, v. a. 1. to blot out; 2. to eradicate, efface, extinguish; 3. to pay, annul; eine Schuld —, to pay, discharge, sink a debt.

Syn. Tilgen, Vertilgen, Zerstören, Ausrotten, Vernichten. Ausrotten corresponds exactly to the English, to root out, extirpate, eradicate, and Vernichten is "to annihilate." We tilgen something that is disagreeable, disadvantageous, &c. to us, e. g. weeds, vermin, debts; and do so by extirpating (ausrotten) the first, and figuratively speaking, the second, the last by paying it. The English for this is "to get rid of." Vertilgen always implies violent measures; it is "to exterminate." Hence we may say, Vertilgen weeds, vermin, but not debts. A person zerstört merely those things, which are composed of component parts, by disturbing their state of rest, by strewing them asunder, &c. Thus zerstört everything, but it does not vernichten. The use of the latter, unless it is applied to God, is always figurative or hyperbolical.

Consequently unbefangen (unprejudiced, impartial) is never a fault, Dreistigkeit (freedom, boldness) may be one, the more so as it approaches to pertness and impudence. In those cases where one's Unbefangenheit (coolness) arises from an absence of fear, it is still a lesser degree of freedom in judging and acting than Dreistigkeit.

Fashion is veränderlich, a man is veränderlich, &c. The proportion between the sides of a triangle is called veränderlich and not unbeſtändig. The former, therefore, points more to the susceptibility of undergoing change and is not always a fault. Unbeſtändig implies more a defect of constancy in the state or relation once entered into, and is always a fault, e. g. ein unbeſtändiger (inconstant) man; unbeſtändiges (fickle) weather. Wankelmüthig (irresolute) can naturally be only used of persons. A man is wankelmüthig, when he often changes his thoughts, his choice, his resolves before the execution of them takes place; he is unbeſtändig and veränderlich, when he often changes his will or plans after having commenced the execution of them. The Wankelmüthige cannot direct his choice to any object with firmness. The Unbeſtändige and Veränderliche does not long remain constant to the choice he has already made; the former cannot make a beginning, the latter cannot persevere.
